

The S&P, The Terrorist Organization on Wall Street?

On August 5, 2011, the greatest act of terrorism ever to occur in America history happened. The S&P terrorist organization on Wall Street lowered the credit rating of America from AAA to AA. This shall always be known as our 'Second Day of Infamy'. This selfish, brazen and cowardly act will certainly have worldwide negative consequences. The S&P terrorists on Wall Street planned and picked their targets well. All the people of America are its victims. They executed their attack with precision.

Since airliners were blown up in Middle Eastern deserts in the seventies, the faces of terrorism and its destructive weaponry have changed drastically. Those days of individuals being dressed in fatigues with Kalashnikovs rifles (AK 47) and holding hundreds of people on planes demanding release of comrades have long gone. Today, The S&P terrorists on Wall Street are far more sophisticated and are dressed in pin striped suits, wear ox blooded shoes and drive expensive automobiles. Their weapons of mass destructions are far more deadly than weapons of nuclear or chemical compositions. These terrorists are armed with an arsenal of calculators, pens, keyboards and credit rating charts. The destructive power of lowering America's credit on our society will last for generations.

This senseless act of terrorism could cause an evaporation of 35% of markets stock values, pension plans and real estate appraisals.

They simply, for political payback and selfishness, just lowered the credit score of the most powerful nation in the history of the world, America. It could bring our powerful nation to its financial knees with havoc. It's like they want America to go into a depression. The cost of this attack will be many times greater than the war on terrorism launched on September 11, 2001. We all will suffer and pay for it.

The S&P terrorists started terrorizing our nation and the world late March of this year. I heard on a news cast today that they are now saying that the credit rating could get even lower. With all the hoops the President and Congress went through on raising the debt, I really did not think America's rating would be lowered. The fears were started by The S&P terrorists on Wall Street. Did they plan all along to lower America's credit rating? Are they bean counters or mean spirited politicians?

Can their hatred of President Obama be that great that they would sink the whole country?

The S&P on Wall Street are a financial terrorist's organization. They are more reckless than the leadership in North Korea. When they lowered the credit rating of Uncle Sam, the coming financial havoc and panic will be felt worldwide for generations to come. I am more afraid of S&P than I am of Al-Qaeda. You can hide from the remnants of Al-Qaeda, but not from the high financial costs of S&P terrorists on Wall Street. You see every time I spend my hard earned dollars, buy a car, and get a mortgage I will be a victim of these terrorists on Wall Street because of higher interests and other costs being passed along to consumers.

The S&P terrorists on Wall Street, the bean counters wearing diamond laced rings and watches, don't have to worry about Special Operations Forces attacking their Wall Street compounds in the middle of the night. They don't have to worry about predator drone aircrafts firing missiles from the sky as they gather or travel back and forth to the bank. As a matter of fact, none of its members will ever be added to any terrorist watch list. They have complete impunity to continue terrorizing Americans and the world's financial systems with their flawed credit rating system.

Those actions of the S&P Wall Street terrorists are very unpatriotic acts and were completely without any merits or sound financial reasoning. The threats and subsequent lower of America's credit, I believe, were political designed to thwart pending congressional investigations of questionable conduct leading to the crash of 2008. The S&P terrorists on Wall Street could also be facing billions of dollars of lawsuits from misled investors. The S&P terrorists on Wall Street, and their other flawed rating company comrades, were called the greatest single factor in the crash of 2008.

Who credits and regulates this terrorist organization or other credit rating organizations? Do they just dream up their credit rating stats and ratings? Who review their books and graphs? Who certifies the terrorists working over there?

The individual consumer credit reports of the top 20% of the management, of this terrorist organization, should be published on the internet. That should be the law. Just how do they manage this credit? What are their credit ratings scores? If the combined scores average is less than 750, then have no dam business rating anyone else's credit, especially not the government.

Well if the financial industry cartel needed a reason to raise interest rates they just got an early Christmas gift. Remember, the members of this cartel are sitting on $Billions of dollars of hard cold cash, a lot of it is stimulus dollars.

When I was going up, I thought the most powerful individual in the world was a United States Federal District Judge. I now must change my obviously false belief. That title should go to the leader of the S&P terrorist organization on Wall Street.

The citizens of this country freely elected the President and members of Congress to handle our affairs, not terrorists dressed in pin stripped suits. The greatest country in the world should not be held hostage by the S&P terrorists out to destroy America.

I predict by February 17, 2012 this S&P terrorist organization will be bankrupt and out of business. They have lost the two grains of respect and legitimacy they so undeserving had for decades.
